HOME & DÉCOR 2019 / 2020

Following the success of its Crystal Rock pendant lights, LASVIT has extended this versatile design line with its vases. Certainly not from the Stone Age, but closer to the fictional Kryptonite, Crystal Rock appears in the cave of the future as an ambassador to the fusion of nature and man, light and reflection, transparency and mass. All these characteristics are gathered within a contemporary silex that interacts between light and darkness.

The fine collection of mouth-blown table glasses is composed of individual pieces, all hand crafted by traditional artisan glassmakers. The delicate linear engravings of the Circle crystal glasses result from the unique production process of each object in fine, pleated copper sheets. The flexible copper mould allows the fluid glass to form its distinct shape of free-flowing circles. Every piece is one of a kind. Enjoy and handle with care.

The renowned Japanese architect drew his inspiration from a technique for preserving construction timber by charring its surface, known in Japan as Shou-Sugi-Ban or Yakisugi. This ancient technique uses charring wood as a means to preserve it without the need of painting or sealing, an aspect leading to the current revival of this technique in eco-friendly architecture. Adapting this process to the centuries-old glass craft technique enabled a contemporary design that is unique for every single piece of hand-blown glass.

Designed by Kengo Kuma

The design for the Otto glassware collection was approached with a balance of refined detailing, applied to both the rustic qualities and the precise craftsmanship of each piece. Alternating radial and tangential cut lines provide dramatic texture to careful line work and the well-defined silhouettes of the Otto collection.

Inspired by the craft itself, these vases remind us of the otherwise unseen aspects of glass production — its production errors. Each hand-blown shape is broken into several segments and their edges additionally hammered to create a pattern visually similar to cutting. The individual pieces are reheated and joined into one unit, creating a safe and compact surface, but retaining their intriguing random patterns.

CANDY

The Candy tableware now complements existing lighting sculptures, and the Candy collection builds on the colorful universe explored and expressed through glass. The collection is inspired by colorful candies, and the brightness of the glass combined with the palette of colors and the visual aspect of the colorful lines make you imagine the piece as a delicious candy. “The priority is elegance,” said Jan Kaplický, maintaining that he sees design merely as small elements of architecture. This champagne bucket carries his classic elegance, organic curves as well as a hint of his futuristic tendencies. Executed with a world-class level of craftsmanship, the piece pays homage to one of the greatest visionaries of architecture of the 20th century.

The Frozen collection was inspired by the transformation of water into ice, the element of randomness used in the context of glassmaking. Glassmakers understand that their material always ‘freezes’ at some moment in the process and only the most skilled hands are capable of creating a unique form. Each piece traces a unique record of the process, becoming an original all of its own.

When making the Papilla vases, it was first and foremost the beauty of the glass itself which guided the hand of artist Vladislav Urban. The initial design was made by a Czech artist during the golden era of metallurgical glass in the 1960s. The vases received the name Papilla due to their round protrusions which are reminiscent of nipples, or papillae in Latin.
